THE COURT: All right. Well, I'm going to, first of all, take up the issue of the Debtor's Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment, and the Court's going to deny the Debtor's Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment. If you look at Section 727(a)(3), the reference there is the Debtor's failure to keep or preserve any recorded information. It doesn't even refer to the recorded information of the Debtor, so it's a broad phrase there that says that if there's any information out there, whether it pertains directly to the Debtor or to a Debtor's holding onto corporation that could explain the Debtor's financial condition, then a failure to keep or maintain that can give rise to nondischarge under Section 727(a)(3), so I don't think that it is limited just to the Debtor's documents or recorded information.

Likewise, Section 727(a)(5) talks about any loss of assets or deficiency of assets to meet the Debtor's liability, and there again, it doesn't talk about -- it doesn't limit itself to a loss of the Debtor's assets, it just talks about any loss of assets. And so, in the context of a Debtor who owns and operates a small corporation such as this where the Debtor is the sole owner, he's the sole employee, that the corporation only operates through the Debtor himself, (a)(5) is broad enough to embrace that.

And so, therefore, I believe that the -I just don't agree with the Debtor's theory on that, and because I don't agree with the Debtor's theory on that, I'm going to deny the Debtor's Motion for Cross-motion for Summary Judgment.

I'm going to move on to the Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment. Plaintiff's always bear a higher burden. Maybe it's not a higher burden but maybe just a harder burden when it comes to Motion for Summary Judgment than Defendants do because the Defendants can just kind of sit back and rely upon an absence of evidence and the existence of a genuine issue of material fact and Plaintiffs don't really have that luxury, so at the outset it's a little bit more difficult for a Plaintiff to move for Summary Judgment.

I'm going to address the Section 727(a)(5) argument first because I think that there's a genuine issue of material fact as a Section 727(a)(5).

As we've discussed here today, the loss of assets and deficiency of assets -- I mean, the most substantial liability that the Debtor has is the liability he has to Touch Tell, and the Court determined that that liability was some $361,000.

In his affidavit, the Debtor has said,
"Well, I have -- part of that loss is explained via some accounts receivable that I've never collected on, granted, they weren't included in my Schedules, I didn't put them there because I just thought that the people that I owed it to had written it off." Not a great reason, by the way, for not putting it in your Schedules, but at least it's an explanation. And in addition to that, as the Court mentioned on the Record in its discussion with Mr. Chestnutt today, there is the question of the lack of credit that Debtor received for some returned cards.

You put those two things together, and they could very well explain the deficiency of assets to meet the Debtor's liabilities, at least its principal liability to Touch Tell. So, as to that issue, I find a genuine issue of material fact that I don't think it's appropriate to enter Summary Judgment on that.

Then we get to Section 727(a)(3). And there the allegation is that Debtor failed to keep or preserve any recorded information in which the Debtor's financial condition might be ascertained.

I have two problems with granting Summary Judgment on this particular count. One of those is that I think that last phrase in (a)(3) makes it difficult to ever grant a Motion for Summary Judgment on this because it says,
"Unless such act or failure was justified under all the circumstances, the case." And that seems to the Court to give the Debtor at least the opportunity in the context of a 727(a)(3) action, to come into this Court and to explain to the Court how its failure to keep and preserve records might have been justified under the case.

And in ruling on a Motion for Summary

Judgment, I don't think that I can just grant the favorable inferences to the moving party on that.

I think that I have to -- the favorable inference has to be granted the exact opposite way, to the nonmoving party, in this case, the Debtor.

The other problem that I have with 1.3

Section 727(a)(3), at least in terms of granting the Motion for Summary Judgment is that there are a lot of records out there that explain what happened to a lot of this money, so there are lots of cancelled checks out there that were admitted into evidece. Those cancelled checks routinely have references to invoices. Those invoices show up in Touch Tell's own ledger, so we can correlate those. So, we kind of know what assets the Debtor received, and there are documents out there that substantiate what assets the Debtor received.

Likewise, there are at least some documents out there that explain what happened with some of these assets. Among those are evidence that was introduced at trial that indicate that Touch Tell took back a number of these cards and submitted them for creditors to the entities that had issued those cards to Touch Tell and that Touch Tell got a very insignificant credit for it.

And in addition, we have

Mr. Rehmatullah's Affidavit in which he says he has some invoices for some things that he didn't get paid back for, for some cards that he sold on credit and he was never paid for. And then he says, "And then there's another transaction where I don't have any invoice on it but I certainly get on the Stand and testify to it and explain it."

I'm leaving open this whole issue of whether or not the Court's determined that the damage to Touch Tell was $361,000, and Mr. Chestnutt has argued today that -- not completely irrelevant, but basically the Debtor's obligation is to come in and document and explain what happened to $800,000 worth of credit of phone cards, even if that doesn't necessarily represent the exact damage to Touch Tell.

I'm not either dismissing or adopting that for today's purposes. I'm just going to have to give more thought to that particular argument, but in light of the fact that I've denied the Motion for Summary Judgment of the Plaintiff, then we'll just reserve that to another day.

So, the Motion for Summary Judgment is denied, and the Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment is denied. I do find that there are genuine issues of material facts on both sides of the case here, and, oh, I guess, Mr. Chestnutt, since you started this whole thing off and kicked it all off, I'll ask you to take your initail stab, if you would, at preparing an Order dealing with both the Motion and the Cross-Motion and circulate it to Mr. Johnson for his approval as to form.
